

JIM

CHARLES PAGE'S SPECIAL FRIEND

Jim was a popular part of Sand Springs to local people and those from Tulsa doing business with Charles Page. Jim was a large German Shepherd. He was his master's constant companion. When Page was at his desk in his office, there Jim was at his feet. When Page left the office, Jim followed along, and if Mr. Page was headed out of town, so was Jim.

During the day at the office was the time and place that Jim did most of his work. From the vantage point on the floor at Page's feet he kept his eyes focused constantly upon the person or people meeting with Page. It didn't matter the kind of business being conducted. It could be a deal involving millions of dollars or a person down on his luck asking Mr. Page for a favor of some sort, Jim would scrutinize the situation and let Page know if he approved or not. Jim might wag his tail and blink his eyes, or constantly stare with an air of suspicion and would not move. At times, Mr. Page would actually ask Jim what he thought. This dog sat through many great business deals and probably helped Page decide on some.

After Page's death, when Mrs. Page and daughter Mary would visit his grave, the two ladies would go by car and Jim would meet them there by running through the neighborhood yards to be able to greet them and be with them to grieve. After their visit Jim would not return home in the car. He would walk back home alone.
